When your dog is a puppy and needs some extra attention, you may not have the mental bandwidth to sort through all the great puppy activities available. But while you are giving your puppy all your attention, what are you actually teaching him? Not all puppy activities are equal. Some are more challenging than others and should be given the appropriate time, attention and care, to allow for proper development. Let's look at the type of activities that are most important to developing your puppy's brain and his mastery of life: • Training Do you know which one of the twelve food groups your puppy is missing? What if I told you that one of them (in fact, all of them) was the most important one, and the other eleven were a waste of time and energy? I'm going to let you in on the secret: All puppies will develop bad eating habits while they are still puppies, and while they are growing, they must be fed fresh meat and vegetables (at least 3-5 times per day). You have to watch them and allow them to be a little bit messy while they are learning which foods are safe and which are not. It's hard, but this is one of the most important aspects of training your puppy. When it comes to training, the more your dog develops independence and self-confidence, the more they will develop into a responsible, happy, well-adjusted adult dog. 82157476af
